

Morning Meeting Activities

MONDAY

Friendship Fusion: Have two random students stand in the class. Ask them to name their best friends. Take turns asking them what good qualities they like about their best friends. Then look for the best traits they both have in common. I love this activity because it is a beneficial activity to develop and highlight good friendship qualities among students.

TUESDAY

Positive Affirmation Circle: Starting from the last student and moving forward, ask each student, in turn, to speak one positive affirmation within thirty seconds, and so take turns completing the class. I significantly suggest this activity because it can be very beneficial and effective in creating a space of positivity in student's minds.

WEDNESDAY

Success Schedules: Ask the best-performing student in the class to share their daily routine and timetable, including weekends, with the class. The next day, ask the second and then the third topper of the class. Put it as an example in front of students of how to set a routine and schedule to perform well. A practical example before their eyes will stimulate them to take action.

NOTES

THURSDAY

Leadership Spotlight: Randomly line up three students from the class and ask the whole class who they think is the best to fulfill the position of class leader. Then the leadership qualities of the student whose name comes up the most should be highlighted in front of the class. This activity is very important for me.

FRIDAY

Story Spark: Pick a child at random from the class. Tell the beginning of any real or imaginary story, and ask that child to complete the story. Tell him a little bit about how the story is supposed to end. I think it can be a great way to spark and shine a student's creativity and imagination.

SATURDAY

Compliment Chain: Ask the child sitting at the front of the class to give a genuine compliment to the child sitting next to him, then to the child sitting behind him, and so on. Thus, create a chain of compliments for the whole class. I personally love this activity as it fosters positivity and a community environment in the class.

NOTES